Dahabiya Nile Cruise is a passenger boat used on the River Nile in Egypt. The term is normally used to describe a shallow-bottomed, barge-like vessel with two or more sails. The vessels have been around in one form or another for thousands of years, with similar craft being depicted on the walls of the tombs of Egyptian Pharaohs. Indeed, the name is thought to derive from the Arabic word for "gold" owing to similar gilded state barges used by the Muslim rulers of Egypt in the Middle Ages. During the 1920-1940's it was commonly used during those elegant days of the monarchy when aristocrats, pashas, emirs, sultans, and sophisticated travelers loved to cruise the Nile in style. Before the introduction of steamboats, the Dahabiya was the most normal way for travelers to ascend the Nile and even after that they remained popular amongst the wealthy. It took from two to three months to ascend the Nile under wind power and another month-and-a-half to float back downstream, stopping at the great temples along the way. King Farouk, Churchill, Montgomery, and others settled in for the journey and a certain Lady Edwards even had a piano installed on her sailing vessel.
